1. The Historical Context of Santa Clara de Asís

1.1 The Spanish Colonial Era

In the late 18th century, the Spanish Empire sought to expand its influence across the New World, establishing missions as centers of religious conversion, education, and economic development. The Santa Clara de Asís Mission, founded on March 14, 1797, was part of the chain of missions that stretched from California's coast to its interior, serving both Spanish settlers and indigenous populations.
